FOOD was strewn through the clubhouse kitchen and a screen door had been ripped from the hinges.

But it was a knife broken off in the ignition of the club's four-wheel-drive vehicle which put Ithaca's patrol of one of the Coast's most dangerous beaches in jeopardy.

Club treasurer and volunteer of 29 years, Paul Barry, said patrols were reduced to paddle skis and stationery observations until 4pm yesterday because members could not use the four-wheel-drive to launch their boat or conduct roving patrols.

He said lives had been put at risk at what most people knew to be one of the most dangerous beaches on the Sunshine Coast.

Members were unable to begin their regular patrols until police had examined the crime scene.

"We have a drowning here about every two years," Mr Barry said of the area surrounding the Caloundra Bar.

"We have already had one rescue this morning with a kite surfer who came off and had to be rescued by a neighbouring club."

Mr Barry, his mother Patricia and his daughter Samantha were among the first on the scene.

Mrs Barry said it was fortunate yesterday's weather kept beach numbers down.

"Someone could have possibly died today because of such a senseless act," she said.

Police say it is believed the attack on the clubhouse may be linked to as many as eight break and enters into surrounding vehicles.

The Ithaca Caloundra City Life Saving Club is an independent group, not affiliated with the surf life saving movement. It has almost 100 volunteers who will have to repair damages using money saved for a new outboard motor.

Anyone with information on the break and enters is urged to call Crime Stoppers on 1800 333 000.
